The governments have been dealing with the Corona pandemic through confinements, lock-downs, curfews, social distancing and the slogan "stay home, stay safe".

Workers in supermarkets, delivery services, factories, nursing homes, schools and day-care centers cannot simply work from home. Thousands of migrant and extremely precarious seasonal workers are flown in from abroad for this purpose and forced to work in cramped conditions in harvesting and meat processing plants while forced to live in overcrowded accommodations.

We should be happy if we still have a job at all. Many who previously worked in restaurants, bars and the cultural sector are now unemployed. What is left, is to go shopping.

People with mental health problems, homeless and illegalized people are left alone and forgotten. Prisoners are isolated. Safety rules such as

Solidarity and self-organisation is the answer at the corona crises distance and basic hygiene are not possible in overcrowded refugee camps at the borders of Europe.

Domestic violence has dramatically increased. Yet survivors currently have little opportunity to escape the perpetrators of violence; "stay home, stay safe" does not work for them. The ever-increasing emphasis on the traditional family model also intensifies the exclusion of people who do not fit into the gender norm.

From the beginning of the pandemic, we faced racist narratives. On the pretext of security, racial profiling was reinforced through police controls, harassment and violence which dis-proportionally targets Peoples of Colour. Right-wing groups regain strength in society, spreading fascist ideology, dragging along antisemitism and racist belief veiled as conspiracy theories.

We don't need to deny the pandemic nor to march hand in hand with neo-Nazis to reject state measures. Nationalism has never been a solution. Fights against injustices and oppression by the capitalist and neoliberal system have always found their way. In unions and strikes, in our neighbourhoods, with mutual aid and Kiezkommunen.

Let's protect one another. Let us share ideas, organize and fight for a better tomorrow.

Together we are strong enough to overcome the crises and change the system!
